

Jane Farrell

Jane Farrell is the Joint Founder and Joint Chief Executive of Equality Works.

She worked in social work and education before founding Equality Works with Annie Hedge in 1992. Jane has consulted and trained widely and specialises in working with senior teams to improve performance through the better integration of equalities and diversity into organisational cultures, strategy, systems, procedures and practices.

Jane works with managers of national and international organisations on implementing policy, providing management services, designing and facilitating away-days for senior teams and Boards in a style that has been described as 'a powerful mix of pragmatic and fun'. Jane's role also involves speaking at many conferences and seminars, and providing executive coaching.

She has focused on the business and strategic development of Equality Works, building a company that is known for delivering interventions that really make a difference. Jane works with clients such as Transport for London, (leading on the award winning Managing Diversity Competence Project) the BBC, QC Appointments Panel, Serco Docklands, BHP Billiton, the Department of Health and many local authorities across the UK.

Jane's current priority is to ensure that Equality Works continues to be recognised as the best training and consultancy company in the UK that works with clients who want to integrate equality and inclusion into the fabric of their organisations.
